Conflict and Negotiations for Federal Executives

Conflict in any workplace is unavoidable, but it's critical that you have an arsenal of management strategies at the ready to resolve disputes and reach agreements quickly and effectively. This course offers personalized approaches and tools to help you face discord with a positive and constructive approach.

- Learn key conflict competency skills including self-awareness, self-management and effective influencing.
- Assess your own behavior in conflict situations and how it impacts others.
- Develop useful personalized strategies for engaging in constructive conflict.
- Use real-life examples of conflict situations to identify alternative ways of handling them as a leader.

An Individualized Assessment of Your Conflict Management Styles and How to Strengthen Them

Before the course, you and colleagues you select will complete a 360-degree assessment that will be used to help you examine the impact of your behavior during conflict situations in the workplace.

Exercises, small group discussion and personal reflection will be used to enhance your self-awareness as you identify your preferred conflict style. The course will culminate with an exercise that allows you to study your own work experiences and determine effective alternative approaches to constructively handling conflicts in a leadership context.

“This material lent itself to application to concrete situations, and the instructor repeatedly encouraged us to make such connections. That personalization increases the likelihood that I will apply our discussions in my office, which I believe will help me to be a more effective leader and manager.”
